A Gray Day in Maine

by Jo Medick
illustrated by Amy Vangsgard

Gail and Wayne live on Crain Bay in Maine. One day, Gail and Wayne ask to play by the bay. "Wait!" Mom says. "The sky is gray, and it is raining."

"Gail and Wayne, you will have to stay in and play," Mom says.

Gail is not happy. Wayne is sad.
"We do not like staying in," they say.

Mom hands Gail and Wayne a pail.
In the pail is gray clay. "You can make clay animals," Mom says.

Gail makes a jay. She adds wings and a big tail. Wayne makes a snail. "We like to make clay animals," they say.

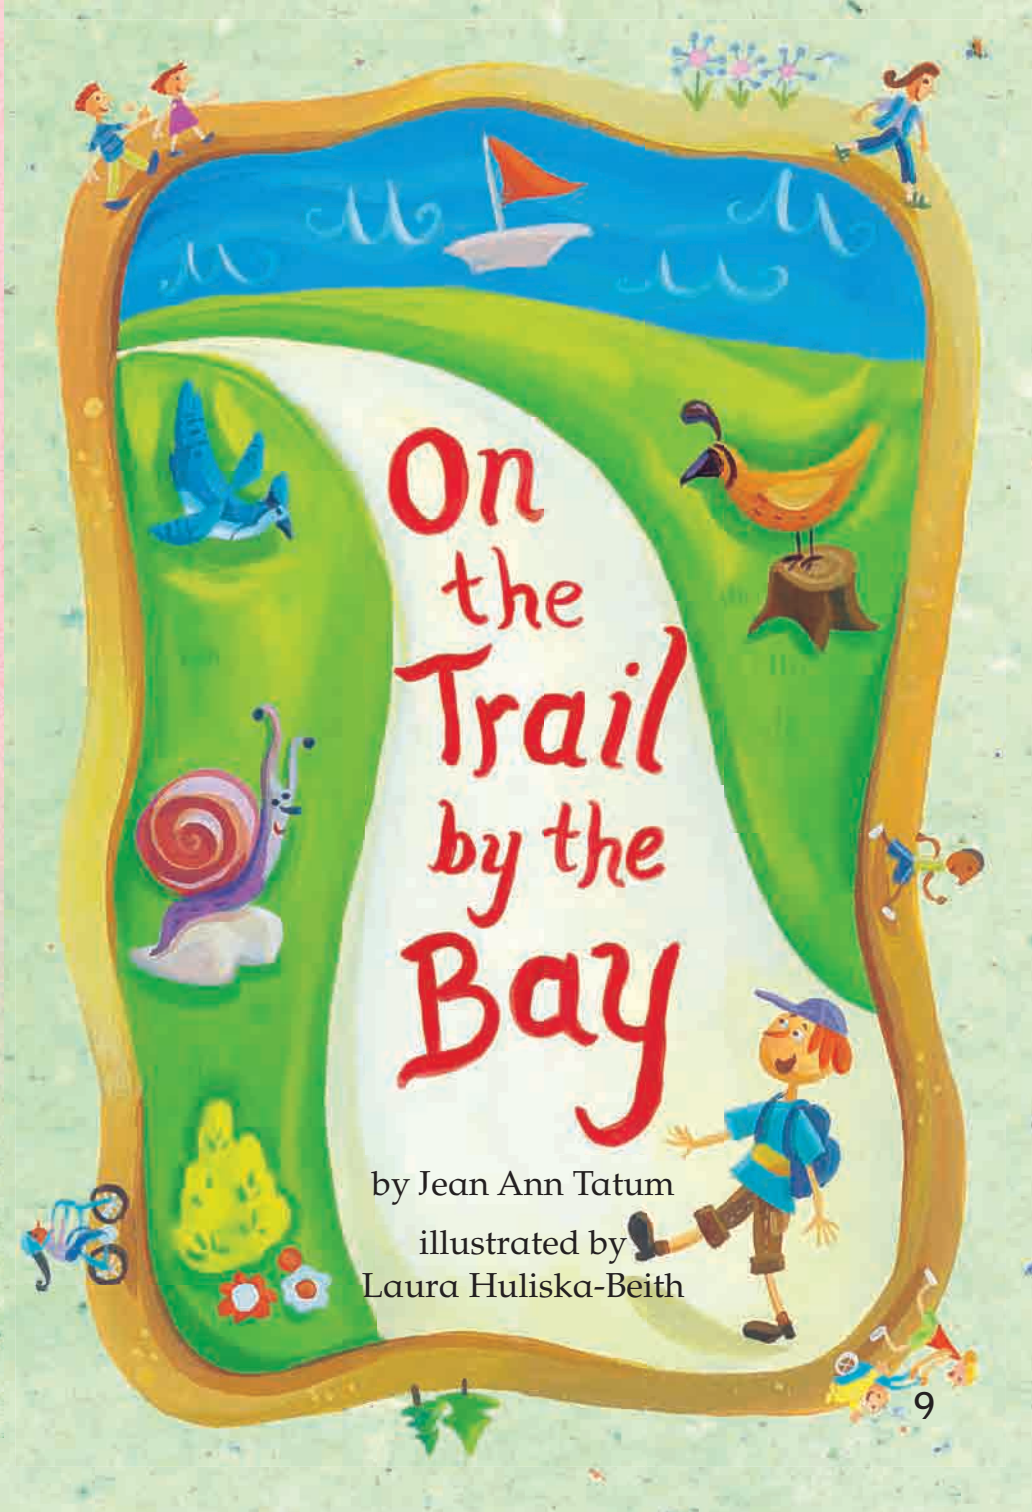

Mom bakes the clay jay and snail.
Now Gail can paint her jay. Wayne can paint his snail.

Gail and Wayne play. Gail sails her jay in the sky. Wayne makes his snail creep on a trail.

The rain stops. "We want to stay in," Gail and Wayne say. The jay and snail did save the day!

On the Trail by the Bay

by Jean Ann Tatum

illustrated by
Laura Huliska-Beith

It is a fine day for a hike on the trail.
Stay on the main trail and do not stray. It makes its way to Sea Spray Bay.

A jay sits in a high pine tree.
It flicks its tail and sings.

Right on the trail is a plump quail.
Did it lay its eggs in a nest close to the trail?

See that gray rock? A snail makes its way on it bit by bit. It leaves a faint trail of slime. YUCK!

It is the end of the trail. You can play at Sea Spray Bay. Feel the bright rays of the sun. Wade up to your waist in the bay.

If you like fishing, you may need to pay to get bait. It is in a plain gray pail. Sit and wait. Will you get a bite?

Sail on Sea Spray Bay and feel the wind. But wait! The sun is faint. The day is ending. It is time to go home.
